

Blog Entry Supports Citizen Concerns Over the Skyline Hogback Areas

Here is a blog entry that might interest you. All spelling and grammatical errors were left intact. What you see is how this appeared on a blog site in its original format.

This is an example of the hazards, the dangers and the city liabilities that exist in and around the Skyline Hogback areas due in part to the lack of rules and regulations governing use of the areas as well as to the destruction (by those recreating) of already existing signs and fences meant to deter such activities.

ford4v429 Join Date: Feb 2005 Posts: 518	Had an ATV accident <hr/> hope you heal up well...my brother in colorado dropped his husky490 front wheel into cattle crossing while buzzing down some rr tracks at about 70...compressed 5 vertabrae, cracked 3, busted helmet/concussion...he was only 'laid up' about a week, but was mighty sore for a month or two, and permanently lost some mobility in a couple joints. thats been almost 15 yrs ago, and he hasnt had any trouble with it since- he said he lost almost 1/2 inch height, still cant hardly believe that... Same brother/same bike a year or so earlier was riding "the hogbacks" in canon city colorado(big hills- guessing near 100 feet), was watching some supercross type guys sailing down the huge hills getting big airtime- he tried but shot over in third gear and instead of landing on the downside of the hill, pancaked it HARD on the flat. he showed me the bike- had a engine mounting lug broken off, bent front of frame, said he blew seals from shocks, yet he pushed it home...he still has no clue how lucky he is.
---	--